POETRY

O New Year, happy, fair and young, Glad welcome and all hall!
I've much to say when you have hung Your har upon the nall.
The year that's gone left much amies, And so—it's up to you
To turn Fate's frown into a kiss,
Dear 1922.

To crippled homes grant your good will, Give them a healing touch; If you must leave them imping still, Hestow a kindly crutch.
On fame and gold no compromise,
Take both—content will do:
Age views the world with different eyes,
Dear 1922.

I've seen how many a New Tear come,
How many an old year go;
How many a spring, with bees a-hum,
How many a wilder's snow!
Tis queer how much I love to live
Who've had so much to rue;
Yet Hope hath still great joy to give,
Dear 1922.

If anybody deems me old,
He doth most greatly err;
The truly wise when frosty-poiled
Have youth in invender.
Joy hath no age. It laughs at time,
And flouts his hurrying shoe—
As I am doing now in rhyme,
Dear 1922.

The world—I love it more and more.

Its beauty and its light:
Let me still keen the foy of yore.
Its dew upon my sight.
On one fond wish et grace descend.

My loved are growing few:
Do—do not rob me of one friend.

Dear 1922.

—Samuel Minturn Peck, in Beston Transpersor.

THE GENTLE LOVER.

'ind is a delicate lover,
He touches with satiny finger
he round of my cheek and the round of my breast,

Is it only to lift up a lock of my hair.
That he peeps my bonnet in under?
Ah, none can hear what he breathes in my ear.
Love whispers honeyed with wonder.

Wind is a delicate lover,
Retiring and mild—I'm mistaken!
He's like all the rest, with a demon peanessed
When with tremors of passion he's

He presses me hard and snatches m The wind is a delicate lover?
